EUGENE V. DEBS.

The press of the country has had so much to say about Eugene V. Debs, who is to lecture at the opera house tomorrow night under the auspices of the Pensacola Library Association, that his admirers here may be glad to read some of the things said of him. The Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald has the following to say:

"Eugene V. Debs is a character—a man who would attract attention in any crowd—six feet one and a half inches tall, stout, and well and compactly built, with graceful movement, and erect carriage. His head is large, with a paucity of hair, his forehead high, and a prominent chin speaks for the character of this idol of the wage-earners. With general features like those of Bill Nye and action that reminds one slightly of Gene Field, he has a great deal about him which makes him wondered at and blamed and whom the press has reviled and praised.

"SERGEANT KITTY."

"Sergeant Kitty," a comic opera new to this section of the country, is the attraction announced to be seen here next Saturday night.

It comes here with a well earned reputation of success in New York, where it ran for one hundred and fifty nights at the Casino and at Daly's Theatre, the two best theatres in the metropolis, which are devoted to high-class musical attractions, and the piece has also been received alike by critics and the general theatre-going public in all cities visited this year with nothing but the highest and most enthusiastic of praise.

The chorus of pretty girls who not only are good to look upon, but who can also sing, is one of the important features of the production. The scenery and costumes by the best known artists in the country are costly and elaborate and conform to the sense of the plot of the play and the locale.

BIG WILDCAT KILLED NEAR COTTAGE HILL.

Eugene Beck, who lives a couple of miles east of Cottage Hill, caught one of the largest wildcats ever seen in this section in a trap at his place on Tuesday night. The cat had been raiding the premises of Mr. Beck for some time, the last depredation being the killing of a goat. The cat is said to have been as large as a yearling goat.

around in the dim light of a pine torch prepared to impale the slippery flounder and drag him from his bed in the shallow waters along the shores of the Big Bayou. It would hardly do to mention his name, but suffice it to say that he was a little wild eyed, having evidently been through a harrowing, hair raising experience of some sort, and the tale he related fully justified his appearance. Here it is:

"Last night a small party of us decided to try our luck with the flounders in the Big Bayou and, soon after the council meeting adjourned, Chief Schad, Alfie Riera, Roland Langford, 'Parson' Caro, 'Old Spot' Bruce, Ed Quina, 'Pard' Beasley, Bob Hargis, 'Hooks' Wilson, Bob Quina and a couple of others whose names I can't recall at present, boarded a launch and, towing two skiffs fitted up with torches, spears, etc., started for the Big Bayou.

"We reached there in good time and got to work at once. Evidently there has not been much flounder fishing there for some time past for the flat fellows were so thick in places that it was hard to keep on one's feet owing to the fact that we were constantly stepping on them and then, of course, they would get out from under."

"We had caught eight or nine boat loads of little fellows running from 12 to 16 pounds and piled them up cordwood fashion on the beach when, all of a sudden we heard a yell from the direction of the boat that Schad was following immediately followed by a splash and then we saw something or other plowing through the water at race horse speed. Some of the boys managed to head it off and it was then found to be Schad, hanging on to his spear for dear life, at the barbed end of which a terrific struggle was in progress.

"Well, half a dozen of us took a hand in the game and finally managed to hold the thing quiet long enough for the chief to get out a pair of 'nippers' which he affixed to the tail of the flounder, for such it proved to be, and hoisted his propeller out of the water. After that his capture was easy and we towed him to a skiff to which Schad fastened him by means of a pair of handcuffs, one of the cuffs being slipped around the flounder's tail and the other locked to a ring in the stern of the boat.

"It was our belief that we had Mr. Flounder foul that time and we started to tow the boat to where the launch was waiting for us. We no sooner got started, however, than we heard a sharp snapping noise and our burden was immediately lightened and, as if by magic, the flounder had turned clear around and bitten the chain connecting the cuffs in two as slick as though cut with cold chisel and hammer. If anybody catches a big flounder with a handcuff on his tail the chief will probably be glad to have him return his property.

"This is a true story and if you don't believe it just call on the marshal and he can show you a pair of the same kind of handcuffs that he used in arresting the flounder."

And the door opened gently and the voracious fisherman waited himself from the presence of the almost dumbfounded newspaper man who had to pinch himself two or three times to be sure that he was awake.

What became of the nine boatloads of "little" flounders dependent knows not, but from the story related above the "big" one must have weighed somewhere in the neighborhood of the figure necessary to make him eligible to membership in the fat man's club.

Perfect Confidence.
Where there used to be a feeling of uneasiness and worry in the household when a child showed symptoms of croup, there is now perfect confidence. This is owing to the uniform success of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the treatment of that disease. Mrs. M. H. Basford, of Poolsville, Md., in speaking of her experience in the use of that remedy says: "I have a world of confidence in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, for I have used it with perfect success. My child, Garland, is subject to severe attacks of croup and it always gives him prompt relief." For sale by all druggists.
